Catherine Pusey, RN, MBA, BS
ECRI Institute, INC

Pain is common among patients in acute care settings, and it is not always effectively controlled through means other than opioids. However, opioid therapy carries risks of harm, not only side effects but addiction and/or dependence. The public health crisis of opioid related substance use disorder has heightened concerns about diversion of controlled substances in hospitals, particularly opioids. ECRI Institute, INC will discuss the results gathered from a deep dive into the opioid issue and provide strategies from lessons learned.

2:15 p.m. - Diversion Prevention-Assessment Tool

Jami Przekop
Stericycle Specialty Waste
Stericycle

Donna Curry
Account Manager
Stericycle

As the opioid epidemic continues to rise and regulators clamp down on prescribing requirements, hospitals become bigger targets for diversion of controlled substances. When controlled drugs are used in an organization, all members of the organization should be educated about the internal and external risks associated with diversion, and their responsibilities for safe handling as appropriate to their roles and responsibilities. Learn to use the Diversion Prevention-Assessment tool offered by Stericycle.

3:15 p.m. - Wrap-up
